ment, social and religious, that could give it significance. All the foremost civilised nations of the world are now Christian; amongst them Christmas Day has long been held to be a characteristic and typical festival—the day on which the tone and spirit of the religion of Christ is most distinctly brought out in teaching, and realised in practice.

It is natural, and it is right, that reflective persons on such an anniversary should not only restore to their minds and their affections the idea which the day embodies, but that they should look back and around and forward, and ask how far these many hundreds of anniversaries have told upon the character of the human race and upon its progress towards perfection. How far has the true idea which dawned on the world at the Nativity possessed the minds and conquered the wills of men? How far is Christendom Christian? How far has the tone of the life and teachings of Jesus, which will tomorrow be historically traced and homiletically enforced, saturated the minds of men and entered into their manners, their customs, and their laws?

It must be admitted that eighteen hundred years of teaching, and even of struggling practice on the part of those faithful to the teaching, have not succeeded in establishing the policy of peace on earth and goodwill to men. The blacksmiths of the world are not busy in turning swords into ploughshares and spears into pruning-hooks. On the contrary, the great master-smiths—the Kruers and the Arnolds—are racking their brains to make destructive weapons more destructive, and to improve the art of killing the greatest number of people in the shortest space of time. So far from being shocked at this direction of human ingenuity, we have learned to think that in that line may lie the best chance for the world's peace—that the more murderous the weapons of war the less the probability of war, and that more is to be hoped for from mechanism than from morals. The inventor may succeed where the Quaker has failed, and the man who will not fight may turn out to be not so good an apostle of peace as the man who can shoot as well as kill ten thousand people at a mile distant in a minute. Meanwhile idealism is not yet realised. War is considered to be a matter of force, and even of bravery. It is becoming a game of tactics worked with weapons embodying the highest inventive skill. The power of killing is becoming perfected that it may make war practically unending; and mankind, overburdened with the cost and shocked at the size of the modern armaments, may resolve that war has become too great a curse to be endured.

But when we have reached that point we have not stopped the strife which generates hatred and rouse in man the latent savage. There are, in fact, four great strifes going on all over the civilised world—there are the international strifes, for which war is at present the last great resort. But beside that there are three other great causes of contention; there is the religious warfare, the political warfare, and the social warfare. The first of these three has, perhaps, lost some of its bitterness. There is no sign that any of the Churches are likely to convert any of the others, and sectarian bitterness and suspicion are still but too rife. But cruel persecution is on the wane. The Inquisition is a thing of the past; political disabilities on the ground of religious belief are comparatively rare, even mild disparagement on the same ground is a thing of the past. There is a broader spirit traceable among the theologians of all the schools, and men do not smother each other to perdition on account of their beliefs with the same gusto and confidence as to merely. Whether this is due to the spirit of science, or to the growing culture of the age, or to the free interchange of all sorts and conditions of men, it would be difficult to define exactly. But if it has not been brought about by a revival of the spirit of Christianity, it is certainly in harmony with that spirit.

Political warfare can hardly be said to have lost its sharpness. The fundamental quarrel between the party of preservation and the party of progress remains as it ever was, and it is confused and intermixed with a number of traditional quarrels. In many countries parties are dissolving and re-combining, but it can hardly be said that because parties disappear, party spirit disappears with them; the whole theory and practice of government seem to be as much in debate as ever. And as to the social strife, that seems to be thickening. The war between the House of Slave and the House of Free shows no sign even of a truce. Neither in language nor in spirit has human strife found more bitter utterance than with some of the Socialists and Nihilists of the present day. What we most need is, not the cessation of strife, but the elimination from strife of all its bitterness. Uniformity of opinion is not to be desired till all men attain to perfect truth. It is out of the collision of opinions, and interests, and ambitions, that civilisation has proceeded. It is not differing that has done the world wrong; it is the hatred that has been born of the differing. Controversy there must needs be while we are all struggling towards the light. What is needed is to be wary of controversy to charity. The difficulty seems to be as great of believing in the honesty of opponents as of dealing fairly with them, and the men who hate most are always the most unjust. Intellectual keenness of discussion needs no abatement; it is the bitterness and fanaticism that we want to be scorched. Peace on earth will be to a large extent the product of good will towards men. There are not wanting some signs, though they are slight, that the tone of discussion is becoming elevated. All who contribute to such an elevation, whatever their rank, or state, or function in life, celebrate Christmas Day to some purpose.

Customs come and go. They have their value and their entrance, or rather their entrance and their exit; and one of them, which most of us have had to obey at the present season, has been the custom of sending Christmas cards. The origin of such a custom is in no means far to seek, and in these days something is to be said in favour of it, as long as the practice is not carried to excess. These are busy times, and few of us desire to spend more time than we can help upon demands of a purely social character. At the present day, however, facilities of communication have resulted to most of us in the acquisition of a wide circle of those intimate acquaintances who, for social purposes, are not easily distinguished from friends. And when any season comes round at which friends are expected to indicate their recognition of one another's existence and to give some sign that in their rejoicings there is a mutual remembrance, the intimate acquaintance has to be reckoned with. To leave him out in the cold is to emphasise the fact that he is not regarded as deserving of special notice, while he on the other hand may form a wholly different estimate of his position. And yet out of the mixed roll of friends and acquaintances whose names appear on our visiting lists we cannot call, or write to, or otherwise take notice of everybody; and the way out of the difficulty which has been presented by the distribution of Christmas cards has been proved to be convenient by its now almost universal adoption. Such a method of communicating the good wishes appropriate to the season is by no means new, and were there nothing to be said in condemnation of it, would deserve acceptance as alike a convenient way out of a difficulty, and a saving of a good deal of time and trouble. But there are several sources of objection. The most honoured of customs are liable to abuse; and we suspect that the growth of abuses will be found to be the cause of the death of many old customs which now appear to us to be not only harmless, but laudable. The mere saving of time is no doubt desirable, but the saving of time often carries with it other consequences which cancel all the advantages which we might otherwise expect to derive.

To commence with an obvious objection, a civility comes to be valuable as soon as it becomes perfunctory; and we suspect that a large number of the Christmas cards which will be delivered at the present season will be despatched less because the senders feel good-will to intended recipients than because they feel that some evidence of goodwill ought to be shown. Those whom we feel to be our friends—those whom we most naturally remember at the present season—hardly require that we should send them any fresh evidence of our feelings, or know that if we desire to specially recall ourselves and our good wishes to their memories, we should seek to do so in some more direct way. To them a Christmas card can mean nothing beyond an excuse either for doing something which is unnecessary, or for not doing enough. For the rest, they know that now-a-days we buy our good wishes by the dozen or by the gross; and they, doing the same thing, estimate them accordingly. They know that we step down to the most likely shop and buy what will give the best evidence, not of our goodwill, but of the excellence of our particular taste. Such a practice will not survive long. As people die of old age so the custom will die of what in customs is old age, namely, lack of vitality. And it will die of something more. It will die of vulgarity. The habit of sending valentines, which many of us can remember as a very popular one, disappeared gradually as valentines took a comic, and eventually a vulgar, form, and there are signs already that Christmas cards are likely to follow the same direction. We freely admit that the Christmas cards of to-day are in no way comparable to the valentines of twenty years ago; some of them are even of high artistic merit, and worthy of serving a far higher purpose than that of a merely temporary communication of the sentiments of the sender. But a sufficient number of them already suggest that opportunity for anonymous gibes which was one of the causes of objection to the old valentines; and as the use of them sinks to wider circles, the tendency to regard them as vulgar will probably continue to increase. But even putting such an objection aside, a great probability remains that an increasingly extravagant cost will before very long put an end to the present custom, and that we shall return to some more simple and inexpensive means of communicating our good wishes.

One class which will undoubtedly benefit is a very hardly-treated one—we mean post-men. Few people who drop their dozen or so of cards into a postbox reflect that perhaps a hundred others are doing the same thing, and that thereby a burden heavy to be borne is being prepared for the backs of all who have hard work at all times, but a season when all the world beside is enjoying a holiday. But for a postman's services would gain a large amount of rest from their labours, for Christmas, were there no Christmas cards, would not be a time of much correspondence. On account of the unfortunate postman the extravagant prevalence of the custom is to be regretted. But to the general public also it threatens to become a burden in another way. It is frequently remarked that Christmas cards indicate the improvement that has undoubtedly taken place of late years in the general taste, and examples of high artistic merit are to be met with in every stationer's shop. But the cost of Christmas cards increases almost proportionately, and threatens to become a serious tax to many who naturally desire to do as the rest of the world does. The expenditure is to a large extent merely wasteful, and is incurred in obedience to a fashion. We all want to be as liberal as our neighbours; and though strong-minded persons may regard those who spend more than they can afford in this way with contemptuous pity, those who make a proper allowance for human weakness will be ready to admit that it is difficult for the larger part of the world to avoid it. It is, however, earnestly to be hoped that the change of fashion—signs of which are already visible, will take place gradually. Many thousands of persons now find employment throughout the year in the production of Christmas cards, and to a large proportion of them it would be a matter of great difficulty to find any other occupation at short notice. But their talents are of a kind which are sure to find a market in some direction. In these days of increasing wealth and luxury those who possess artistic ability are increasingly valued, if only for decorative and illustrative purposes. If their labour can be gradually diverted into other channels, a burden which threatens to become yearly heavier will be taken off the backs of the public; and there is no reason why a more deserving class of workers should be called upon to submit to the privations which too often accompany what to the rest of the world is merely a change of fashion.

The best of actors betray no disturbing consciousness of the presence of the audience. Their attention is apparently engrossed by the dialogue and the business of the play. A Judge upon the bench, administering justice, deals with stern realities; and it might be thought that for him, even more than for the player, it is well to be absorbed in the part he has to perform. A Judge, seated in neither a pulpit nor a lecture table; and as a rule sermons or lectures, interpolated in the midst of the proceedings of a court of justice, neither derive special authority from their surroundings, nor throw upon the latter any additional light. There may be exceptional cases in which a few words, and a weighty word from a Judge to a prisoner, plainly and simply spoken as from man to man, may have both directly and indirectly a beneficial effect. But evil, not good, is likely to be done when the passing of a sentence upon a prisoner is made the occasion for an ill-considered address either to the people assembled in the Court or to the people outside. Mr. District Court Judge DOCKEN, in sentencing a prisoner on Thursday, made (so it is reported) the following remarks:—"It was shown that he (the prisoner) had been earning as much as £1 a day canvassing for a life insurance society—one of the lowest positions under ordinary circumstances to which a man could descend, for persons who, after pestering the very life out of you, would not leave you without first taking the very coat off your back, and the very boots off your feet." Now what good purpose was to be served by saying this? Could the prisoner be benefited? Could the audience gain any advantage? Surely there are certain first-class cases of insurance canvassers, and we doubt not that includes respectable and worthy men, may justly feel aggrieved by this sweeping and extravagant charge. And next, that the use of such language on the judicial Bench, where, if anywhere, the words of truth and soberness only should be employed, cannot tend to good manners to the unlearned. Besides, what will our visitors think of us if they are really to believe that within the experience of so high a functionary as a District Court Judge to be left speechless and bootless, and be canvassed out of his life by a man whose pretence is to want to insure? Surely there should have been an inquest in the case. But if the DISTRICT COURT JUDGE was talking at random on the bench, that is the very performance which such a person in such a place should carefully avoid.

Considering the busy holiday season and the fact that a large number of our prominent citizens and politicians are out of town or engaged with other duties, the banquet, last night, given to Mr. W. A. M. A. at the Town Hall, was a very successful affair. It was a tribute, not only to Mr. M. A. himself, but also to the family of which he is a member. The name which he bears has been long and favourably known in commercial circles in these colonies, and especially in Sydney, and as Mr. O'CONNOR, who proposed the toast of "The Guest of the Evening," said in a very pleasant frankness, Mr. M. A. is a very young man in years and young in politics, but if his speech of last night may be considered as any criterion of what he is capable of, there is a successful future before him in the arena of British legislation. MOORABAK ESTATE.

It is confidently anticipated that the discovery of PAYABLE COAL will be of great importance to the whole district, and of material value to the wealth and value of the particular estate.

TRUSTEES OF THE PROPERTY (the Lord Bishop of Sydney).

In March last, entered into an agreement with certain parties, and in the event of their striking coal, and for the purpose of providing coal for the NECESSARY DWELLINGS AND MACHINERY connected with the coal-mining, agreed to sell 800 ACRES, comprising not more than 300 feet water frontage, and to be confined to such portion of the Estate necessary for coal-mining purposes, such land to be comprised of portions not alienated at the time of discovery of coal.

AS A MATTER OF FACT, coal has not yet been discovered, but the drill has gone through 300 feet.

FOURTY-NINE FEET OF RICH COAL.

Operations are still going on, and those interested are sanguine of success. The coal-miners, however, do not wish it to be understood that they are making any rash or misleading statements in relation to the coal. On the contrary, they are offering this land for agricultural purposes, for which it is admirably adapted, as existing crops on the property fully prove—consequently, the coal-miners will be able to make good investments for those purposes. If, however, coal is discovered, they will find their investments have been more profitable than they anticipated.

FARMERS, YACHTING, BOATING, DAIRYING, FISHING, CATTLE-DEALERS, SWIMMING.

Those wishing to secure rich Agricultural Land for Cultivation, Residential, or Manufacturing purposes in GIBSON'S STONE BRICKWORK.

NORTH WILLOWHURST, AT GORE'S HILL. A sure fortune to an enterprising man or firm, with moderate capital, as the quality of the clay and the shale is admirably suited to the manufacture of bricks, and the manufacture thereof from compressed and semi-plastic bricks.

CHIMNEY-POTS, TILES, MEDALLIONS, DRAIN-PIPES, AND OTHER ARTICLES.

The present working of but a small part of the large area of valuable land is at a depth of 20 ft., and the certainty for a long course of years of an enormous output of Clay and Shale can be proved beyond a question.

A most extensive and highly profitable trade can be here developed.

The situation is the best possible, in view of the popularity of the large surrounding district, which, from their elevation and charming views, are gradually attracting settlement, and which must still further be promoted by the quick and easy means of the RAILWAY, now constructing, from PEARCE'S CORNER to ST. LEONARD'S.

THE MACHINERY AND KILNS are of the best make, and capable of doing the work required in the smoothest way and with efficiency, whereby the various articles manufactured at the works have won merit in the market.

An inventory of the MILLION of bricks, and the capacity of the works, and estimate of production, showing possible annual output, will be made by the MASTER OF THE AUCTIONEER, 24, PITT-STREET, in a day or two; and the works will be open for INSPECTION, and are STRONGLY INVITED.

Mr. Gibson, on the works, will show intending purchasers over the plant, and the MILLION of bricks, and the capacity of the works, and estimate of production, showing possible annual output, will be made by the MASTER OF THE AUCTIONEER, 24, PITT-STREET, in a day or two; and the works will be open for INSPECTION, and are STRONGLY INVITED.

RICHARDSON AND WRENCH have received instructions to sell by public auction, at the Rooms, 133, Pitt-street, on FRIDAY, 12th JANUARY, 1888, at 11 o'clock.
